Provide the citation information for the source following the rules of a particular bibliography style (for example, Harvard or APA). Consult your diary or Senior Library website for guides on how to write a citation.

For example:

Provide a brief (100-200 word) descriptive and evaluative summary of each source. You could mention: Audience, purpose, tone, media; The relevance of the source; Summarise the unique findings or arguments; Make a judgement on the quality of the source; Research methods – are they appropriate or could their sources be questionable?

Put your citations in alphabetical order.

I generally do not care for this type of book, but this is the best I've seen of what might be described as secular or "psycho-social" ritual. The authors present a good overview of what rituals do for us psychologically. They draw from works by Joseph Campbell and Carl Jung. The authors have created new and imaginative rituals to inform everyday life.

Bruce Dawe's poetry explores a range of human experience, often drawing on the voice of the 'person in the street', and using small episodes to make important points. His poems can be funny, witty and satirical on the one hand, yet lyrical, poignant, sad and tender on the other. The poems highlight the value and warmth to be found in everyday experiences. Hardship is acknowledged, but life is affirmed, and the poems explore the ways in which feelings of identity and belonging may be shaped by experience.
